Ceres

Previously referred to as "the most attractive village in Scotland", Ceres is a village in the heart of Fife, surrounded by picturesque countryside and just over three miles from the town of Cupar.

Ceres has retained much of its old-world charm, with features such as the church steeple, the old weavers cottages, and the humpbacked Bishop's Bridge serving as charming reminders of days gone by. Since 1314 (with a few exceptions), Ceres has held Highland Games in the village, which are the oldest free games in Scotland. Spectators and competitors alike flock from far and wide to the village at the end of June, where the games are accompanied by a market, dancing, music, and other sporting events, ensuring there's something for all the family to get involved in. The Ceres Inn has been a family-friendly pub in the village since 1721, and offers a range of food and drink, as well as a separate room ideal for small functions. Ceres is also home to a Post Office, a minimarket, a number of independent retailers, a café, and Fife Folk Museum, which offers a tea room. More extensive amenities can be found in nearby Cupar, under 10 minutes away by road. The countryside surrounding Ceres offers fantastic opportunities for outdoor pursuits, or for those who prefer to exercise indoors, a number of fitness groups, classes, and gyms can be found in Cupar. Families with children of school age can access education at nursery and primary level in the village, with secondary schooling provided in Cupar or the surrounding towns. Ceres benefits from regular bus links and the surrounding area is easily reachable by road, with nearby Cupar train station providing services to Edinburgh and Dundee.
