LOCATION

WOODHAM MORTIMER

Woodham Mortimer is a small village between Danbury and Maldon and is mentioned in the Domesday Book. The name is derived from the Old English meaning "Village in the Wood" and at the time of the Norman Conquest the parish was known as Little Woodham. The village has a local pub (The Hurdlemakers Arms), the parish church of St Margaret's (c.1080), a golf driving range, a village hall and a cricket club.

Woodham Mortimer is only 7 miles due east of the city of Chelmsford and its excellent choice of facilities, including two outstanding grammar schools, a bustling shopping centre, a station on the main line into London Liverpool Street and access onto the A12. Closer to home, the picturesque village of Danbury also has a choice of shops, amenities and two preparatory schools (Heathcote and Elm Green) and the nearby town of Maldon (recently named by The Times as the best place to live in the countryside) has a good range of shops and other amenities. Created a Royal Borough in 1171 it is famous for, among other things, its sea salt, its port on the River Blackwater for Thames Barges and its eponymous battle in 991.
